Poetry. Literary Nonfiction. California Interest. Activism. Filipino Studies. "In poems and vignettes, Tony Robles has written the generational memory of San Francisco at the point where alienation, deportations, and technological invasions are gutting its soul. This Filipino activist just won't have it and neither will you after reading this superb book that restores the sense of a People's City."—Jack Hirschman

SF Poet of the Real

By Wei Ming Dariotis

Robles' poetry is both sublime and real. I used to run into him and his uncle, the "Filipino Poet Laureate of San Francisco," Al Robles, on the bus. That's the kind of poet Tony is. A poet of the people, like his uncle, he observes and turns a beautiful phrase into a heartbreak of recognition. He knows the streets of San Francisco; he knows the souls of poetry living in each of the old and broken bodies blithely ignored by hipster tourists rampaging like hungry locusts. His poems make you feel human.

Like everything that Tony Robles has written

By Esther Torrefiel

Like everything that Tony Robles has written, this was a very good book. And, if you are a mother or father or schoolteacher, you should get his book, "Tony Gonzales, Great American."
