Secure in her family, a little girl describes one happy day, introducing each detail with the phrase: "I know a place where pillows are fluffed...and stray clothes picked up from the floor." In this cheerful place, food is nourishing, everyone is productively occupied (Mom makes muffins but also works at a computer while the baby plays beneath her), and there are lots of companionable moments (popping corn, reading together), all brought warmly to life in Ray's softly glowing art. As revealed on the last page, the place, of course, is home ("I know it by heart--by the number and by the street"). Specific enough to hold attention but universal in appeal; an effective tribute to home and family. (Picture book. 2-8) -- Copyright ©1992, Kirkus Associates, LP. All rights reserved.

Perfect book for cuddling with your kids!

By Jeannine Victory

This is a short, sweet day-in-the-life of a home with young children, from the grade-school-aged daughter's point of view. From getting up for school through going back to bed, she mentions the sights, sounds and smells of her cozy family life on an average winter day. Simple images like the family snuggling in front of the fireplace before bed and lines such as, "...the dishes might be chipped or cracked, but there's never been an empty one," sneak into your heart and make you feel warm, secure and lucky to be with your children in your own home, no matter how small. The final lines - which my older kids used to repeat with me - catch me off guard now, with tears in my eyes, as I read them to my youngest. Enjoy!
